Our history

The original inhabitants of the Armadale region were the Nyoongar people. There are numerous places in and around Armadale that retain Aboriginal names as an acknowledgment of the area's first inhabitants.

With the arrival of Europeans to Western Australia the Swan River Colony was created in 1829 and the town of Kelmscott was established as an army barracks. Kelmscott was proclaimed a townsite in 1830, making it one of the oldest towns in the state. The district prospered in the early days as a centre for timber cutting, orchards, dairies, market gardens and brickmaking works.

In the 1860s the part of the Canning Valley region now known as Roleystone was a haunt of Western Australia's most famous bushranger, Moondyne Joe. Notorious for his jail breaking abilities, Moondyne Joe managed to escape from the special 'escape proof' cell that was constructed to hold him at Fremantle Prison.

In 1853 the Narrogin Inn was built at the point where the road out of Perth divided, one branch going southeast to Albany, the other south to Bunbury. This became the first staging post for the mail cart from Perth to Albany and Perth to Bunbury, and Armadale grew up around the hotel precinct. The original inn has long gone but the present building, constructed in 1936, remains an important landmark to this day.

The official opening of the railway line from Perth to Bunbury in 1893 accelerated the development of Armadale and Kelmscott. The Armadale siding soon grew into a busy railway station from which the products of the region were freighted.

During the early 1900s, planting of orchards grew at an increasing rate in Roleystone and Karragullen, with property brochures extolling the virtues of the beautiful scenery and fertile valley soils. This was a time of Italian migration into the district.

The 1920s brought an increase in motorised transport, the introduction of electricity, and the beginning of construction on the region's three major water storage projects.

The following decades saw unprecedented population growth for the region. Whole new areas of housing appeared, with many of the residents being British immigrants. By 1970 major urban development was taking place on the slopes of the Darling Scarp.

Community amenities and facilities matched the pace of growth with new railway stations, primary schools, shopping centres, sports grounds and playing fields. In 1985 Armadale was granted city status.

Despite these changes to the built environment there was a growing consciousness of the need to preserve the past. One of the most significant achievements was the preservation, rejuvenation and development of Araluen Botanic Park in Roleystone into a unique and special place of great beauty. Thousands of visitors are drawn to the park every year, especially when the spring tulip displays are in full bloom.

Another preservation project is an old Jarrah tree near Armadale Shopping City. It's estimated to be between 400 and 800 years old and is one of three trees in Western Australia to be heritage listed.

Armadale has a rich cultural history. You can discover more at the History House Museum located in the Historic Precinct in Minnowarra Park. See meticulously restored vintage machinery at the Bert Tyler Vintage Machinery Museum located at the Armadale Visitor Centre, then visit the Armadale Outpost Telegraph Centre, faithfully recreated to honour the first Post Office in Armadale. Every Tuesday a group of Morsecodians send telegrams as in days of yesteryear. You can even send your own telegram and help keep this form of communication alive.

The Minnowarra Chapel is located in the Minnowarra Historic Precinct. Originally built in 1903 as a Congregational church, the Chapel was relocated and rebuilt, brick by brick, at its current location in 1987. The Chapel has lovely overviews of Minnowarra Lake and is now a popular wedding venue.

The romance, the intrigue, the heartache and the triumphs of Armadale's yesteryear are being captured on tape and transcript as part of an ongoing oral history program at the Birtwistle Local Studies Library in the Armadale Central Shopping Centre. The library is named after well-known local identity, Ivor Treharne Birtwistle, whose personal collection forms the core of the library. For all opening hours contact +61 8 9394 5000 or visit www.armadale.wa.gov.au.
